2. How much of this spending was for services specifically directed at children exposed to domestic abuse through intimate partner violence between their parents or other significant adults in their lives.
“Services directed at children” means domestic abuse services where children are identified the primary beneficiary. This could be a service that is delivered directly to a child, a ‘linked’ service delivered to the child and a parent, or a service that is delivered to a parent with the explicit goal of improving outcomes for the child.

The figures provided for question 2 should not include spending on any primary prevention programmes, universal education programmes or services which specifically respond to domestic abuse in young people’s own relationships.
